About the Role

Key responsibilities

- Provide medical and scientific expertise on assigned disease areas and products, supporting the full product lifecycle and therapeutic area strategy.
- Lead and contribute to medical education, scientific publications, congress activities, and external scientific programs, acting as a Novartis medical ambassador.
- Shape and co-create scientific engagement strategies, medical education plans, and medical content in close collaboration with cross-functional partners.
- Ensure high-quality, credible, and compliant peer-to-peer scientific exchange with healthcare professionals and medical experts.
- Identify and develop opportunities for joint value creation with scientific leaders, healthcare systems, and patient organizations, including co-designed strategies and studies.
- Gather, analyze, and share insights from external engagements, congresses, real-world practice, and peer-to-peer interactions to inform disease area strategy.
- Identify real-world evidence and implementation research needs, and support local evidence generation activities to close data gaps and improve patient outcomes.
- Ensure all medical, scientific, and educational activities adhere to medical governance, ERC, local laws, and internal compliance standards.

Requirements

- Advanced scientific degree (MD, PharmD, PhD, or equivalent); country language and English required; 2–3+ years of experience in medical or clinical roles.
- Experience in Medical Affairs or customer-facing scientific roles within the pharmaceutical industry.
- Strong medical and scientific expertise with the ability to interpret, analyze, and communicate clinical data.
- Proven capability in scientific writing, publications, and development of medical education materials.
- Experience working in cross-functional, matrix environments with effective stakeholder collaboration.
- Strong planning, organizational skills, and sound business acumen.
- Excellent communication skills with strong customer and stakeholder orientation.
- Preferred experience with innovative study designs, real-world evidence generation, and implementation science.
